OUR MISSIONARIES TO BE PROTECTED

UNCLE SAM PREPARING THE REGULAR ARMY TO GO OVERSEAS

To Fight In China, the Chinks To Be Taught a Lesson—The Rhythmic Steps of the Boys In Khaki Will Soon Be Heard On the Streets of Shanghai and Peking—From Henceforth It Will Be "Onward Christian Soldier" To the Rescue of All Americans In the Beleaguered Land.

The United States Sunday planned to rush troops from the regular army into China to protect refugees who are fleeing to Tien-Tsin from the interior.

This will be done immediately if the northern forces fail to hold the Cantonese in their drive on Peking and north China.

A terrific battle now is raging between the two forces.

The troops are to be rushed from the trained units of the regular army in the Philippines and Hawaii. There virtually are two complete divisions in the insular possessions.

Army transports now are standing by to move the troops if the emergency arises, it was learned.

Officials fear such an emergency is imminent because of rioting in north China. Americans are taking refuge in Tien-Tsin, the port and terminus of the railroad that serves Peking and north China.

Tien-Tsin has nothing that properly could be called a defense from Chinese attacks, such as has been built up at Shanghai.

In the meantime, Admiral Clarence S. Williams, commander-in-chief of the American forces in Asiatic waters, now in charge at Shanghai, deems it inadvisable to move any marines from there. Secretary of the Navy Curtis D. Wilbur declared that he considered their position to be precarious in the event of a determined attack from the Cantonese. Since then the Cantonese troops, who had advanced far to the north, have begun to fall back on Shanghai and the Yangtse river and renewed looting is expected.

The marines now on their way to China are not expected to arrive there before the crisis develops. There is one regiment in Shanghai and there is one which sailed April 7, from San Diego and one now being concentrated there to sail before April 20. It will be close to one month before any of them can reach there.

In the emergency the government cannot wait. Troops may be transported from the Philippines within a few days and from Hawaii within little more than a week. It also develops that there are no more marines in the American service available for China duty, so the government has been compelled to turn to the army.

This, it is learned, is why the army was unable to lend to the navy a transport when requested to do so late in March for the purpose of transporting the regiment of marines now being mobilized at San Diego, and who will travel on a chartered commercial steamship.

The army troops will be used to protect Tien-Tsin and to keep the rail way open from Tien-Tsin into Peking. Under treaty with the Chinese the United States is permitted to have a regiment of infantry patrol the railroad and this regiment now is on duty. Only naval troops are allowed on the Yangtse and for landing parties.

In view of the fact that the Chinese now have no government with which the United States may deal and American lives and property are in jeopardy the onth consideration will be to provide protection at all costs, it was learned. The delicate situation depends largely on the outcome of a battle which is now being fought, but regardless of how it terminates officials expect to see the armies break up into bands of brigands and the necessity for protecting nationals to continue for a long time.

The urgency for more troops has been emphasized in every recent report from Admiral Williams and from American diplomatic officers in China, it was learned.

The general impression is that it will require more than a year for any faction which may be victorious in the revolution to establish a stable government—one which will be able to protect foreigners. Until this is done officials make no secret of their intention to keep troops there. It was emphasized in official quarters that the United States is quite willing to negotiate new treaties, withdraw all troops and surrender any special privileges, but will only do so when it can be with the assurance that Americans will be protected.

While these plans were being perfected in Washington a dramatic exodus from Hankow, down the Yangtse river to Shanghai is believed to be under way. It is delayed somewhat by the failure of the U. S. S. Monocacy, which is proceeding down the river from Shanghai to report. Both of these ships are loaded with refugees on their way to join others at Hankow. They were due to reach Hankow sometime Sunday.

Rear Admiral H. H. Hough, in command of the Yangtse patrol, is holding his flotilla of river gunboats and destroyers at Hankow for their arrival when he will run the gauntlet down the Yangtse to Shanghai. It is 500 miles. Either side of the bank literally is alive with hostile Cantonese troops, and officials fear the flotilla will be fired upon. British refugees also are expected to sail down the river with the Americans.

DEATH FOLLOWS OPERATION FOR GOITER

Mrs. Ray Miller, Formerly Anna Louise Kellstadt, Died in Columbus Today.

Mrs. Anna Louise Kellstadt Miller, wife of Ray Miller died Monday morning at Mt. Carmel hospital, Columbus, following an operation. The deceased was the daughter of Mrs. Lillian Meinfelter Kellstadt. Funeral arrangements will be announced in Tuesday's issue.

Few Madstones Still Hold Faith of Owners

Leitchfield, Ky.—One of the few madstones in the United States is owned by a citizen here and is said to have served many persons during the numerous generations it has been in the family's keeping.

Modern schools of medicine have never placed faith in the madstone as a cure or preventive of hydrophobia, but its alleged powers still are believed in by several Grayson county residents.

It is supposed to have the property of absorbing poison from any wound. The stone adheres to the wound, the belief is, until the impurities are absorbed and then drops off.

The famous madstone mentioned by Scott in "The Talisman" is in possession of a Virginia family and is closely guarded. It was brought from Scotland in 1776.

We sometimes wonder where the jewelers get all the money they hold up men take away from them.

Cherry Blossom Time in Washington

The national capital's most beautiful flower spectacle, the Japanese cherry blossoms in Potomac park, is now attracting thousands of visitors.

HAPPENINGS IN OUR STATE

Taken Direct From Wires By Correspondents of the United States Press Association.

Dalton—The Saturday midnight performance of a local theater was cancelled when police appeared and suggested to the manager that it was a violation of the state blue laws to operate on Sunday. The manager said he would take his case to the city commission.

Columbus—Florine's Golden Lady, Clark county Jersey milk yielder, unwittingly has contributed to a movement to intensify Ohio farm produce. Her March record was taken by a committee interested in promoting increased farm produce and will be used to stimulate raising a fund for that purpose.

Columbus—John F. Tarr saved his watch and got a swift kick when as he held aloft his hands in response to a businesslike request, one of his assailants told the other that Tarr was "the wrong man." The returns of his watch was followed by a heavy thud.

Gollipolis—Mrs. Elizabeth Gibson mother of six children was fatally injured when run over by 13 year old Dana Davis.

Cincinnati—Wiley C. Hill, 51, widely known river captain, shot by his wife, Mrs. Edna Earl Clark Hill, 50, who then slashed her own throat, is in a serious condition. Mrs. Hill's condition also is reported critical, but physicians believe both will recover.

Mrs. Hill, because of the wound in her throat was unable to talk, but in a written statement admitted she "did it all."

Martins Ferry—Fred Latham tossed hot pennies to children who serenaded him and his bride on their return from being married at Wellsburg, West Virginia. Outraged parents complained at police headquarters where they brought their children with their scorched fingers. He was fined $10.

Purely American Bird

The humming bird is found only on the American continent. It is closely allied to the swift, and there are several hundred species native from Labrador to Patagonia. The humming bird does not exactly move backward, but by the use of the pectoral muscles of the wing beats the air with a rapidity which enables the bird to remain stationary and to make such darting movements that apparently the flight may be backward.

When inventor and promotor meet let the public beware.

HOPE TO COMPLETE SESSION.

The Ohio general assembly reconvened Monday with leaders of the senate and house still hoping that it may be possible to complete most of legislative work by the end of the week.

If the majority "program" bills and the $51,000,000 general appropriation bill can be finally approved leaders plan to recess for at least two weeks. After the recess the law makers would return to consider vetoed bills and correct any legislative records.

Chief obstacle in the way of accomplishing this plan, is the general appropriations bill. The house has already passed this measure, but it is doubtful whether the senate finance committee, which now has the bill, will be thru its work and ready to report to the senate before the weekend. Should it become apparent that the recess cannot be taken as planned, both chambers will adjourn Friday, to reconvene again next week.

PNEUMONIA CAUSES DEATH YOUNG CHILD

Gerald Davis, son of James and Clara Manbeavers Davis, died Sunday morning at 7:30 o'clock at the home of his parents on West High street, following a two weeks illness of pneumonia. The child was born in this city, June 30, 1922. Besides his parents two sisters and two brothers are living.

The funeral services will be held Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Church of Christ in Christian Union. Rev. O. L. Ferguson will officiate. Interment in Forest cemetery.

Meat of Seals, Canned in 1918 Still Edible

Tacoma, Wash.—Meat from seals killed for their fur on the Pribilof Islands and canned in 1918 was opened here this week by government officials and found sweet and fit for human food. A small amount of the meat was canned by the government in the last days of the World war to test it for emergency food.

The flesh of seals is used on the rookeries as the only fresh meat available while killing at pelting time. The seal brains and livers are of the finest quality. Despite the fish diet of seals the flesh does not possess an associated flavor.

A three-year-old fur seal will yield 50 to 60 pounds of meat, only the shoulders being saved. Several efforts have been made by Japanese and other interests to lease the meat-canning possibilities on the Pribilofs, the product being for ultimate consumption in the Orient.

NEWS ABOUT COURT HOUSE

General Happenings Taken From the Records of the Various County Offices.

Suit For Divorce.

Mrs. Scherelda McClain has filed a suit for divorce in probate court against Arthur McClain. The parties were married at Greenup, Kentucky, November 20, 1925. They have one child, a daughter, two months old. She charges her husband with gross neglect and extreme cruelty. She asks for the custody of her child and support. Abernethy & Simkins represent the plaintiff.

Marriage License

Joseph Harold Kinser, 22, glassworker, Bremen, and Mary Ruth Seitz, 19, Ashville. Consent of parents. Rev. D. S. Mills.

RECORD LAMB BIRTH.

What is believed to be a record in lamb birth was established at Batavia when a sheep owned by John Winemiller, gave birth to five lambs, altho one died soon afterward.

Twin lambs are common in various parts of the country but such a record as this is unusual.

Two of the four lambs will have to be fed from a bottle as the mother lamb can take care of only two.

FIRST GAME OF SEASON

The Circleville Eagles worsted the Ashville team Sunday in the first game of the season. The score was 8 to 2. Circleville pitchers were Murphy, Kanavel and Smith, of Nelsonville. Catcher, Adams, of Lancaster.

The first league game will be played here next Sunday. Circleville will play Washington C. H. O. team.

Enforce Politeness in Manila Traffic Force

Manila.—Traffic policemen here do not razz offending motorists.

They are instructed by Chief of Police John Green, an American, that it is their duty to keep traffic moving, but that berating offending motorists is not one of their functions. Consequently, minor offenders are halted and given a "short, kindly talk." More serious offenders say "good morning" to a judge.

Traffic moves more by precedent than by regulation, but it is only the new arrival, usually an American, who becomes impatient. Precedent is based on custom and, in turn, custom is largely based on the laws of nature.

But the natives are not impatient and the nattily dressed traffic officers keep things moving with seldom a traffic jam.

WHEELER SEES SPLIT IN FOES OF PROHIBITION

Butler's Denunciation of Nullification is Change of View, He Claims.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler's "denunciation of nullification as a cowardly method" of combatting unpopular laws, serves to emphasize a "split in the wet forces," Wayne B. Wheeler general counsel for the Anti-Saloon League, said Sunday at Washington.

The Columbia university president's views were expressed during his Boston prohibition debate with Senator Borah. Wheeler contended that it formed a departure from "the attitude of the man who formerly favored people ignoring statutes which interfered with their customs and habits."

"If Dr. Butler continues to advance at this rate, he will be in complete loyalty to the constitution in about a thousand years," Wheeler said.

"The outcome of the debate would have been just as pronounced if the question had been 'Resolved that the Democratic party should declare in favor of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.' At least two-thirds of the Democratic states as well as two-thirds of the Republican states have demonstrated by referendum votes or by the election of legislatures that they are for prohibition and its enforcement."

"Not even a university president can convince the people that it is good party politics to put a plank in the platform which is opposed by two-thirds of the people in the party. Of course there are some who will vote a party ticket, no matter who the candidate is in the platform. There are, however, an increasing number who put principle above party and would vote for a man on the opposite ticket who stands for their principles rather than for the one on their own ticket who would misrepresent them."

SOCIAL CALENDAR

The Woman's Foreign Missionary society of the Pherson Methodist Episcopal church held its annual thank offering meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Reid Wednesday evening, April 7. There were 25 members and visitors present. The devotional topic of the evening was; "The Midnight Ride" and Mrs. Mary Stoer, the president, had charge of the meeting. Readings were given by Mrs. Minnie Neff, Miss Bernadine Stoer and Mrs. Lloyd Neff. The society wishes that all members make plans to attend the group meeting at Williamsport April 29. After the meeting delicious refreshments were served by the hostess assisted by Mrs. Etta Neff.

Charcoal Formation
Charcoal is the carbonaceous substance left from wood after its other elements have been driven off by heating, without allowing it to undergo combustion. This is done by burning the wood with only a limited supply of air, so that the other elements are consumed while the carbon remains almost undisturbed.

HORNSBY WILL HEAR TERMS

Pittsburgh, Pa., April 8.—(UP.)—A possibility that the deadlock over the Hornsby stock case might be broken appeared this afternoon when Roger Hornsby agreed to send his attorney to the meeting of the National League heads.

Both the Rajah, second baseman on the New York Giants and owner of 1,167 shares of stock in the St. Louis Cardinals and his counsel, William F. Fahey, remained away from the morning session of the league, called by President John H.

Heydler, in an attempt to settle the matter before the opening of the baseball season.

During the luncheon recess, however, Hornsby said he was willing for his attorney to attend the afternoon meeting or else to consult Attorney L. J. Bondy who is representing the Giants at the meeting. This was the first move in which Hornsby indicated his willingness to confer, albeit indirectly, with the moguls now in session here.

DR. RIGHTMIRE IS HONORED

Columbus, April 9.—President George W. Rightmire of Ohio State University, was elected vice president of the Association of Ohio College Presidents and Deans, at the final session of the twenty-ninth annual conference, Friday in the Fort Hayes Hotel.

Dean Philip C. Nash, of Antioch College, was elected president. He has been vice president. Dean Florence K. Root, Wooster College, was re-elected secretary and treasurer.

"How shall we, in a day of expansion, retain the charm and efficiency of the small college," was the subject discussed by President R. E. Vinson, of Western Reserve; Dean John B. Kelso, Wooster College; President George F. Zook, Municipal University, of Akron; Dean Bunyan Spencer, Denison University; Dean T. D. Schoonover, Marietta College, and A. A. Morris, assistant to the president of Miami University.

THIRTY VOICES

In Double Choir At St. John's Church.

One of the most beautiful and impressive services of this Lent, took place last evening in St. John's Episcopal church when the last of the series of special Thursday evening services was held. The special feature of this service was the presence of Rev. Benjamin De Camp, Rector at Circleville, and his splendid choir, under the leadership of Mrs. Rolland Heiskell, soprano-soloist and teacher of music for the Pickaway County schools. The Circleville choir united with the local choir of St. John's with Mrs. George Bentley, also of Circleville, at the organ. And a total of thirty voices rendered the music.

Long before the choir processional, at half past seven, beautiful old St. John's was filled with an eager and reverent congregation. An instantly as the choirs of both churches marched from assembly room below up the main steps and into the church everybody arose and in a great unison sang the old, familiar air of Dr. Arthur Sullivan's, "Onward Christian Soldiers." The effect was most impressive and to the point of inspiration.

The speaker, Rev. De Camp, delivered an exceedingly helpful address based upon the words of our Savior in a part of the sermon on the Mount, as recorded in part of St. Matthew's Gospel in the sixth chapter. His subject was "The Conquest of Fear and Trouble."

Mrs. Rolland Heiskell rendered most impressively, a beautiful soprano solo composed by Dr. Van de Water, "The Publican." This followed immediately after the address and added greatly to the helpfulness of the service.—Lancaster Eagle.

FARM PRICES

In Ohio Were Lower In March, 1927, Than Last Year.

Farm prices in Ohio for March, 1927, declined to a level of 144 as compared to a level of 155 for March, 1926, according to J. I. Falconer, head of the department of rural economics of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station.

As a whole the prices of Ohio farm products during 1926 just about maintained the level which they reached in 1925. Prices started in January, 1926, at a level of 156, reached 159, the highest of the year, in June, and declined to 151 in December.

The price situation of an individual producer depends somewhat upon the products which he has to sell, as there is still a wide variation in the comparative prices of different farm products.

Potatoes now rank highest in price of our retail products. Hay, corn and oats, our leading feed crops are low. Fortunately for the Ohio farmer, not much of these crops are sold.

Of livestock and livestock products, lambs and wool show lower price levels, but are still bringing good prices. Dairy products have maintained comparatively favorable prices.

Hog prices have maintained a ratio to corn prices of over 18 to 1 since November, 1925, and are still in the longest period of sustained favorable price ratio for the past 20 years.

A closed mouth is the noblest work of man.

Touch of Unique Fur Adorns Spring Coats

Women of fashion seeking exquisitely refined effects for their spring coats, rather than bold-patterned novelties, find their hopes realized in models of quiet-colored kasha, all-wool repps, and lightweight twills. There is a springtime lightness about these trim coats which is appreciated. Certain subtleties in their detailing such as intricate seaming, diagonal tucking and a discreet touch of unique fur, give them a thoroughly patrician style. Such is the exclusive model in the picture, which chooses pinkish beige kasha for its medium, with a binding of twin-beaver blended to the cloth it trims. Shaded furs such as this add a new note of interest to coat embellishment this season.

Bags of Tailored Type Are Now Being Offered

Two bags of tailored type and designed for the woman who desires something very well made are now being shown. They are of medium size, large enough to carry papers, memorandum book and even a passport case. Both have leather strap handles and are bags that are intended to be so carried. One frame is black enamel and gold in an antique design of rare simplicity. The other frame is also of metal, but plain, and has an unusual clasp. It locks by simply turning the disk, which serves for the usual leather tab. Both bags are fitted with swinging purse, mirror and extra case for cards or powder.

Snakeskin bags in small flat melon shapes with a thumb tab for carrying are ornate enough to go with the most filmy afternoon frock. The fancy clasps, although in some instances covered with the leather, are studded with jewels or made entirely of marcasite and enamel. Another feature of these bags is the double inside purse, one side being lined with white kid and the other with beige.

Pearls of pinkish tint are strung and woven in small rings that form a flat collar necklace. A double strand pendant of larger pearls fastens by means of a small loop at the end and is finished with a large pearl. This tassel or pendant is arranged so as to fall on a line with the ear. In place of the pearls in the pendant some of the collar necklaces are shown with emeralds.

New Hosiery Designed With Inverted Clock

Since chifton hosiery has found its way into the realm of sports clothes many changes have taken place with regard to both color and style. No longer are variety and novelty of design confined to the costume, for now there is a stocking that is designed with an inverted clock; that is, it starts at the top and extends about half-way down either side of the leg. These clocks are long and flatly woven in a contrasting color and give a tapering effect where most needed. White stockings have clocks in the new spring shades of green, red, maize, blue, tan and orange. The tans and pastel shades show striking color combinations that accentuate the color of the hose.

Stockings in the new shades of beige, taupe, flesh, pink, tan and nude are most attractive. A novelty in the stockings for dress are those of all-over silk net, a little open-work pattern woven like the old-fashioned lace mitts.

Choose Your True Perfume

MRS. CARRINGTON IN COLLAPSE

Chicago, April 8.—(UP.)—Trial of Edward C. Carrington's divorce suit halted temporarily today when Mrs. Anne Walsh Carrington collapsed on the witness stand after she had told part of the story of her marriage. She described her life with Colonel Carrington as "four years of horrible persecution." Each episode as described by Mrs. Carrington was based on alleged "insane anger" of her husband at some trifling incident which displeased him.

She told her story readily enough at first, but when her attorney, George L. Schein, asked her to repeat some of the "foul names" she said Carrington called her during one of their quarrels, her voice broke and she could not continue. Court adjourned to allow the witness to regain her composure.

Solon Would Legislate to Fix Size of Biscuits

Topeka, Kans.—The Oklahoma legislators appear to have gone Kansas one better in the matter of culinary reform.

An Oklahoma man wants to regulate the size of biscuits, fixing their width at three inches. A copy of a bill setting forth a reform in the size of biscuits was received recently from Oklahoma City. Kansas was urged to join in the uplift movement. If the three-inch-wide, biscuit reform is good enough for Oklahoma, the sponsors of the bill believe that Kansas ought to try it out.

Senator James W. Finley of Chanute, who recently championed the abolition of mince pie, has been asked to study the Oklahoma biscuit reform bill and make a report.

Oats Produced for Grain UnprofitableFarmers Can Well Substitute Other Grain.

Oats are one of the least profitable grain crops raised in New Jersey. This statement was made by Prof. G. W. Musgrave, agronomist at the College of Agriculture, New Brunswick.

Several years of observation and study have convinced Professor Musgrave that most farmers can well substitute soy beans, wheat, rye, or barley for the oats generally used in the common rotations. Particularly valuable are soy beans. At the present time it costs $34 to produce an acre of them whereas it costs $30 to produce an acre of oats. Even more striking is the difference in value between these two crops at the time of maturity; soy beans are worth $25 an acre, and oats are worth only $2.5.

Soy beans yield one to three or four tons per acre, and under favorable conditions should average two tons. In feeding value they compare favorably with alfalfa hay. Hence, on farms where considerable hay is fed, they may readily replace much other hay or release it for sale.

The soy bean is a legume and, consequently, a soil improver. By planting this crop the amount of nitrogen fertilizer required will be much less, for, like all legumes, it adds rather than removes nitrogen from the soil. If soy beans have never been grown on the field before, it is necessary to inoculate the seed. This is most easily done by the "soil and seed method" described in Extension Bulletin 32, issued free of charge by the College of Agriculture at New Brunswick.

When soy beans precede wheat in the rotation, prompt action at harvest time is necessary in order to prepare a seed bed properly for the wheat.

Water Warmed for Fall Pigs Helps Make Gains

Through the cold months pigs will pay big returns for the trouble and expense of warming their water. A feeding trial at the Ames experiment station showed that the pigs given warm water, through automatic troughs, not only matured earlier, but made gains on considerably less feed. Both lots were fed the same ration. The pigs that were fed in the old-fashioned troughs, where no attempt was made to warm the water, took 111 days to reach a weight of 225 pounds, and required 423 pounds of feed for each 100 pounds of gain. They showed a margin over feed cost of $5.98 each.

On the other hand, the pigs that were given the warmed water from the automatic troughs, reached an average weight of 225 pounds in 106 days, and required only 379 pounds of feed for each 100 pounds of gain. They showed a profit over feed cost of $7.13 each.

If one takes into consideration the saving in grain and the fact that these pigs reach maturity earlier than the others, the increased profit per pig was $1.70 in favor of warming the water.

Green Manure Crop Will Draw on Soil Moisture

Any green manure crop, whether rye, sweet clover or weeds, draws heavily on soil moisture. It is quite necessary, then, to watch the weather during the spring when such a crop is growing. If the season is below normal in rainfall, the rye may use up so much water that the corn crop will have a hard time getting enough and may die during a short period of drought. A ton of dry matter in the green manure crop may represent an amount of water equal to the entire rainfall of June.

Pasturing reduces the amount of water used by such a crop. Green manure may also be disced down or plowed under earlier than was originally planned. All green manure crops must be first thoroughly disced into the soil if danger of insufficient moisture is to be avoided. Discing also helps work the crop into the soil so that rapid decay will follow and the growing corn will receive the most benefit. Sweet clover decays more rapidly than rye and may cause somewhat less loss of moisture after it has been turned under.

Increase Cottonseed in the Ration for Steers

When the price of hominy is 10 per cent higher than the price of cottonseed meal, the amount of cottonseed meal should be increased so that it is 20 per cent instead of 10 per cent of the concentrated feeds in the ration for steers.

This is a statement of Prof. R. B. Hinman of the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y., who says that the general rule that cottonseed meal should not exceed 10 per cent of the grain ration should be shifted when hominy is high.

The increase in the cottonseed meal is economical and is safe if succulent feeds like corn silage or pea vine silage are fed. Cottonseed meal fed to lambs may be increased to one-sixth of the grain ration if the lambs get silage and do not get legume roughage. These suggestions apply only to the present relative prices of cottonseed meal and hominy, and they cannot be used safely when the feeding period of steers exceeds 180 days or that of lambs exceeds 90 days.

"AND THEN," the little girl sat with her knees under her chin and the light of romance and romancing was in her eyes, "and then there was a clatter as of horses' feet on the paving outside. It was—it was the prince in a golden chariot, come to take little Mary to the picnic at the castle."

So the story went on for Bonnie Lawr, plain of feature and modest in dress, and the trick of holding her audience. When she saw the fairies and the hands of splendor she was no longer the skinny Lawr girl. Her brown eyes become soft and she held her chin high. The circle tightened about her and Nathan Cromwell, of the freckled face, was closest. It was great fun, more fun than floating a raft in the creek, when Bonnie Lawr got "to seeing things."

After it was over and the girl had gone home, to the poorest home in Minden, she thanked her stars ruefully that she had an imagination. Always, in her play, she listened for the clatter of the horses and the coming of the prince.

Jasonville was planning its spring festival. The governor was going to deliver a speech, the silver cornet band was to play, and several hundred school children in marvels of home-made costumes were scheduled to execute maneuvers on the green. The little town fluttered in excitement a month ahead of the date but when the time narrowed to a week, and then a day, nothing else was worthy of conversation. Hadn't the merchants agreed to lock doors, and weren't the church ladies going to serve ice cream!

On a little home in Elder avenue a sign proclaimed: "Miss Bonnie Lawr, dressmaking." There behind the window, waiting for her prince, was a brown-eyed woman of something over thirty. She was the Bonnie of old doing her best to pretend that Platt Peters, assistant at the garage, was a prince and that the automobile he would presently steer to the curb was a chariot. Platt, as a member of the "committee on conveyances" had agreed to see that Miss Lawr reached the picnic grounds. As he was married, very fat, and smoked a vile pipe it was so difficult to picture him as the prince, the Bonnie sighed.

Then it was the limousine came up the street. Bonnie's imagination made it hers but her mind told her it would go by without stopping. The limousine drew up to the curb and she rose frightened. It was a beautiful car with a uniformed chauffeur who had alighted and was opening the door.

The man who walked up to her door wore a high hat. It was the first Bonnie Lawr had ever seen. In the pictures such men were either landlords or United States senators. Thinking that he had made a mistake and that she must explain the dressmaker went to the door.

"Miss Lawr," the magnificent stranger was bowing, "I have come to take you to the picnic, if you will let me."

Bonnie could only nod. The committee on conveyances had found this surprising substitute for Platt Peters. As in a dream she walked to the car which was such a one as she had never seen. The stranger could see she was radiant.

"And then, and then," he was saying softly, "there came a clatter of hoofs in the court, and—"

"Nate Cromwell!" "Bonnie! Don't you know I have been looking for you? Do you think I didn't mean it when I said I would be successful some day and come back? Bonnie, I went back to Minden, and you were gone. No one could tell me where."

"But Nate, I didn't think you meant it. I thought you had forgotten. You were no more than a boy."

And so she rode to the picnic and when the crowd shouted a welcome and the silver band began to play she had her second surprise. This magnificent man, this Nate Cromwell of the high hat, this man who had just kissed her, was the governor. The little dressmaker's dream had come true.

"It seems a pity," Mark Twain once said, "that Noah and members of his family did not miss the boat."

"This statement was intended as a joke," adds Ed Howe, "but there is a good deal more than a joke in it. If Noah and members of his family had not found safety in the ark, the human race would have ended with the flood. Up to the time of Noah, the people had acted in such a foolish way that the Lord decided it was best to destroy them. The descendants of Noah are not doing any better. So it seems a pity Noah and members of his family did not miss the boat."—Capper's Weekly.

"INDIAN GIVER" LEGEND IS TOLD

Blackfeet See Moral and Trade Honestly

Glacier Park, Mont.—The odious expression "Indian giver" (meaning not for keeps), which is applied to people who give something and then want it back, never fitted the Blackfeet tribe after the Great Spirit brought disaster to Napee, an old man of their nation, according to the present-day oracles of the Glacier National Park reservation. Here is a legend that lives vividly among young and old:

Many moons ago an aged Indian traveling alone met a coyote and made a companion of him, just like he would a dog. The day was hot on the prairie and the Indian and coyote came upon a huge outstanding rock on the plains. The old Indian took off his buckskin coat and spread it over the rock, giving the garment, to the prairie landmark. After resuming his journey with the coyote it started to rain, and old Napee sent the wolf back for the coat.

But the rock wouldn't return the coat, and the coyote came scampering back to the Indian with its tail hanging between its legs. This made the aged brave mad, and he retraced his steps in haste, grabbed up the coat and started on his journey.

He and the coyote hadn't gone far when they heard a loud, rumbling noise. Looking back they saw the rock rolling after them. It bowled over a herd of buffalo, killing many, and came bumping over the prairie in pursuit of them. The coyote was flattened out dead. Napee saw a night-hawk soaring in the sky and called to it for help. The hawk flew down just as the overheated rock burst in two with a loud explosion.

Wiping the cold sweat from his brow, the Indian went on his way badly frightened by his experience. But he was a mean and selfish old man and hadn't learned the moral lesson of the incident. For when he came upon the nighthawk's nest he gave vent to his savage nature by forcing open the mouths of the young nighthawks until they bled.

The old nighthawk had followed and the Indian ran into the lake, thinking he'd escape the furious parent bird, but he found he couldn't keep his head above water lest the hawk pick his eyes out. So Napee drowned.

The Blackfeet Indians to this day relate the legend and point gravely to the moral of it, viz.: "When you give or trade with anyone, don't expect anything back, no difference what the loss or suffering may be." Thus it came to be the motto of the Blackfeet to do their trading "for keeps," and in trading with other tribes they always laid stress on the fact that they strongly disapproved making a bargain and not standing by it.

AMUSEMENTS

The shifting sands of the Great American desert have doubtless covered some of the greatest dramatic stories ever enacted by man, and what more natural than that Francis McDonald, the star of "The Desert's Toll" should select the location he did, for the filming of this great out-of-doors epic?

The story of "The Desert's Toll" which is the next attraction at the Met theater, starting today, has to do with the evil machinations of three outlaws in a mining country, and their complicated efforts to outwit Frank Darwin, a dashing young denizen of the ragged hills.

There's a girl from the east, effectively played by Kathleen Key, whose recent work in "Ben Hur" is still a topic of conversation. And Ton Santschi, the burly villain who has never been forgotten since his sensational debut in the first edit of "The Spoilers," is seen to tremendously good advantage.

The character of Frank Darwin, played by McDonald, is most interesting. He is a young, well educated white man, who lives with friendly Indians in a cave in the picturesque mountain rocks. He is that peculiar combination of the cultured white man and the primitive dweller in the untrammeled mountain fastnesses.

His love affair with the eastern girl runs the gamut of human emotions. Believing her, through most of the story, a false and treacherous tool of his enemies, he undergoes a gradual birth of love in spite of himself.

The mad dash over hillsides, pursued by the bloodthirsty desperadoes, which he carries the injured girl to medical assistance constitutes one of the most thrilling episodes of motion picture history.

Some people are like cider; they grow wickeder every day and nothing can be done about it.

SEEK NEW METHODS TO CONSERVE COAL

Experts in all parts of the world are tackling the problem of how to use coal to the best advantage.

Professor Bergius of Heidelberg has reduced coal to a paste and combined it with hydrogen at a very high temperature and pressure. The resulting fluid has all the properties of crude petroleum and can be treated in the same way to produce petrol and other oils.

Another scientist reduces coal to a gaseous form and then liquifies the gases. He has produced methanol, which seems to have all the properties of wood alcohol; synthol, equivalent to a high-grade petrol; and a substitute for benzine.

General Patart, a Frenchman, has been experimenting with coal-produced synthetic alcohol, which shows a saving of 15 per cent in calories over petrol. The temperature of the radiator in which it is used was considerably lower than in cars using petrol.

WAS THE WATCH YOU CARRY NEW...WHEN HANSOMS RULED THE STREETS?

A watch may never lose a second yet be many years slow

The owner of such a watch may never miss a train or an appointment but it is the one false note in his modern makeup, probably the only thing he has that stamps him as a bit old-fashioned, a trifle behind the times. And yet a new and modish Elgin can be had at a moderate sum. Slipped into your pocket, or strapped on your wrist, it will win and hold your affection as no other watch possibly can. For Elgin is conceded to be the world's standard for watch integrity.

THE WOMAN'S WRIST WATCH, in a case of 14-karat solid white gold, is priced at $60. THE MAN'S WATCH may be had in a 14-karat gold-filled case of white or green tone. Sells for $40.

We will show these and other Elgins to you gladly. No other watch is offered in so generous an assortment of styles nor at a price range so liberal.

OFFICE ROOMS

William Clifton, the contracting carpenter and builder, has a force of men building partitions on the second floor of the Jones-Fitch building, formerly the Circleville Hardware company block on North Court street. The second floor will be fitted up with seven suites and will be rented out for offices. The rooms are light and airy and will make very suitable offices.

Circle Realty company will have the leasing of the rooms.

Seed Bed Essential for Garden Success

Big Factor in Raising High Quality Vegetables.

The best way to produce garden vegetables of high quality is to have a good, well prepared seed bed in which the small seeds may germinate easily and the young plants may grow quickly into edible vegetables.

"Thorough preparation of the garden soil is a big factor in the production of high quality vegetables," says Robert Schmidt, vegetable specialist at the North Carolina State College of Agriculture. "Fall plowing is best, but if this has not been done, then the soil should be broken as soon as possible. Any stable manure applied now should be well rotted, in order to be quickly available to the plants. Most garden soils are deficient in lime, and ground limestone used at the rate of 2,000 pounds to the acre will result in a big improvement in both soils and crops. An exception is made in the case of Irish potatoes. No lime should be applied to the land on which Irish potatoes are to be grown this year."

Professor Schmidt states that a well pulverized seed bed is essential for the proper germination of the garden seeds. Even the best seeds will not germinate in a pile of clods. The garden rake is a good tool for the final preparation of the seed bed. The smaller the seeds that are to be sown, the more finely should the soil be pulverized.

Thorough preparation of the seed bed will make subsequent cultivation easier, states Professor Schmidt.

Individual Cows Cause of Bitter Milk Trouble

When one or two cows are kept for the family milk supply, the milk at this time of the year commonly develops an abnormal taste and odor.

It is now known, says the dairy department of the New Jersey State College of Agriculture, that the trouble is not caused by bacteria, but by an enzyme which is secreted into the milk and which breaks down the fat to produce the rancid odor.

The common practice in overcoming this difficulty is to cut down the grain ration to the amount needed by the cow and to give two or three doses of epsom salts at intervals of three days. The milk is brought to the boiling point and then rapidly cooled to check the development of the bitter taste.

The same trouble may occur in the milk of individuals in larger herds, but the mixture of milk from the herd will cause the abnormal condition to go unnoticed. The milk from these single cows develops a characteristic bitter or salty taste, particularly when the cow is well advanced in her lactation. It rarely occurs, however, when she is receiving green food. The milk is objectionable but not necessarily unwholesome. The cream from such milk churns with difficulty and often not at all.

Founder in Cattle Is Caused by Many Factors

When a steer that is being crowded in the fattening process becomes extremely footsore, moves about reluctantly and with difficulty, and lies down most of the time, founder usually is the cause. In the chronic form of the disease, the hoofs grow long at the toe, may tend to turn upward and rings or wrinkles form upon the wall, under the hoof-heads. Cattle may also be foundered by over-driving on a hard road.

Prolonged standing on concrete floors should be avoided, also drives on a hard road. Overfeeding with protein-rich concentrates is also dangerous. Making silage, roots and linseed oilmeal a part of the ration lessens the likelihood of founder. Treat a starting case of founder by standing the affected animal in a creek or pond, on a soft floor, or where that cannot be done, let it stand on a floor deeply covered with clay and kept soft with water.

Give the animal a few doses of epsom salts and follow with a tablespoonful of powdered alum three times daily for an adult beast. Give the dose in water and in two or three days substitute a like dose of sulpet.

Every Beekeeper Should Raise His Own Queens

It is not profitable for the beekeeper to keep a queen for more than two years. When she reaches that age she has passed her prime and will soon become of little use to the colony. Often the colony will supersede her by raising a young queen. When they do this, the old queen soon disappears, once the young queen has settled down to laying. It is better, however, for the colony to be requeened at two-year intervals and this will leave very little superseding work for the bees to do.

Every beekeeper should do his own requeening and raise his own queens. The raising of queens is a fairly simple matter and a profitable one. In the first place, the queen to be used as a breeder should be selected from the best colony in the yard. It should be first in honey production because the queen of such a colony will transmit this characteristic to her progeny. The queen should be from a colony that is gentle, as this is an important thing if one wishes to work with gentle bees.

This tells the whole story
Earned income is the most valuable asset a man or woman can possess. On our incomes we depend for all that makes life worth while—food, shelter, clothing, as well as luxuries. Earning power is necessary to human comfort.

When well and earning
The two squares below will represent the average man's situation as regards income and disbursements when well and earning—the income exceeding the outgo.

When sick or hurt
Illness or injury stop or reduce income, but INCREASE expense. Therefore the situation changes to the following:

Trouble, Trouble!
Admiral Sims, denying that he had ever attacked the Annapolis naval academy, said at a dinner in Newport: "Trouble, trouble! The sailor's life is nothing but trouble from one end of it to the other. The fact is, I never knew of but one man who had a sane excuse for going to sea."
"Who was that, admiral?" asked a pretty Newport girl.
"Noah," said Admiral Sims. "If the old fellow had stayed ashore he'd have been drowned."

THOMPSON
Says He Will Run Gunmen Out of Chicago.

Chicago, April 8.—(UP.)—While police today sought two bandits who held up a mail train just outside the city, sought a bandit trio that executed seven store holdups, and investigated the shooting of Vincent "Schemer" Drucci, gang leader, William Hale Thompson, mayor-elect, announced "the exodus of gangsters, gunmen and hoodlums will mark the opening of my administration."
"We'll put the police back on their beats and rid the town of crooks," he said. "The great exit for gunmen, crooks and stickup men will be one of the first signs that will go up after my inauguration."
"We'll invite the blue noses and the Internationalists to get out of Chicago and make this town the greatest in the world."
Morgan A. Collins, chief for four years under Mayor William E. Dever, has resigned. It is considered likely that Michael Hughes, present chief of the county highway police and former chief of detectives, would be assigned the task of preparing the "exit for the gangsters."
Thompson will take over the duties of mayor, April 18, serve for two days and then take a trip with political friends.

Proved Cuba an Island
Sebastian de Campo, a Spanish navigator, was the first to sail entirely around Cuba and prove that it was an island. This he did in 1508. Columbus had supposed it to be a part of Asia.

PICKING TEETH
Causes Them To Decay Say Hygienists.

Chicago, April 8.—Don't use toothpicks if you wish to keep your teeth! This is the latest advice issued by the National Mouth Hygiene Society, in convention here.
"Never push a wooden pick between the teeth except as an emergency measure," the society admonishes. "Constant use of wooden toothpicks will wear grooves in the teeth. Toothpicks are likely to lacerate the gums with minute splinters."
"Savages and animals keep their teeth clean and gums sound by eating coarse and raw foods. Because civilized man is the only animal that cooks his food, thereby softening all rough and hard particles before he eats it, he must use a tooth brush.

"While it does not entirely eliminate, the toothbrush cuts down the incidence of decay to a marked extent, and, further, it prevents gum trouble. That the eating of candy is a cause of teeth decay is a fallacy. If anything, candy included in a well-balanced diet, tends to keep the mouth clean because of its saliva creating faculty.
"Teeth should be brushed at least twice daily, up and down, not sideways, morning and evening, the latter time just before going to bed, as during the night salivary secretion is at lowest ebb and the self-cleansing of the mouth is poor. Following a brisk brushing, it is advisable to rinse the mouth of all loosened particles of food with a mild solution of salt and warm water. Such treatment, with periodic visits to the dentist, will keep the teeth in good condition."

Appreciation

The first time that one sees a glorious thing, one's heart is lifted up towards it in love and awe, till it seems near to one—ground on which one may freely tread, because one appreciates and admires; and so one forgets the distance between its grandeur and one's own littleness.—Charles Kingsley, in "Two Years Ago."

Exalted Opinion

A great mistake is often made by fellows who fall at little jobs in concluding that they are cut out for bigger ones.

A Few Roses, More or Less

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright.)

TABITHA came slowly down the wide stairway, her small gray suede shoes brave with silver buckles, her demure gray velvet frock Quakerish in its soft simplicity. Her golden hair shimmered in the gloom of the vast hall, and to Gerald Lang, standing at the foot of the stairs, her gray-blue eyes were blue, and as true as love's own flower.

As she reached the bottom of the stairs, Gerald bent to kiss her fingers with a gallant foreign gesture that amused and pleased her at the same time. Tabitha was sure that he had come to propose to her again. He followed her into the drawing room, where vases and bowls were filled with American Beauty roses. Tabitha took the largest vase in her arms. Her lips touched the roses.

"You dear things," she whispered, then to Lang, "Did you send them, Gerry?"

He nodded.

"Your birthday—two for every year." His dark eyes sought her face eagerly—for something—he scarcely knew what.

She was counting the roses. "Forty-eight!" she sighed.

Gerry looked uncomfortable. "Perhaps there should have been more—" he hesitated.

"There are too many!" she smiled brilliantly—a dazzle of blue-gray eyes reproached him, ridiculed him.

"Does it matter, Tabitha, a few roses more or less?"

"It matters a great deal; I am only eighteen today, Gerry. With two roses for every year, three dozen would be just right."

His gaze crystallized on her eyes, more gray now than blue, and rather cold and hard. "Six years ago when I was last home," he said coldly, "you were eighteen, but I am a poor mathematician, Tabitha."

"Rather!"

Tabitha rang for a servant and ruthlessly pulling out a dozen of the roses, ordered them to be thrown out, and when the man had gone, she turned to Gerald. "Now I am happy with your roses, Gerry!"

"I am glad you are happy, Tabitha," and his voice changed. "I have come to make my adieux, Tabitha—I am joining the Blitzen exploration party after all."

"Into Asia?" she faltered.

She was pale now and not so pretty. She had been sure old Gerry was going to propose—she wondered why he had not.

He said good-by and went, and forgot to kiss her hands. He had first refused to join the expedition because he had resolved to marry Tabitha—but now, things were changed. Tabitha had had a birthday—she had lied to him, and no Lang of Lang's End had ever wedded a deceitful woman, or one who wasted precious roses.

Twenty years afterward he came home from Asia, a lean, silent brown man of fifty. One of the first things he did was to order roses for Tabitha. She had never married, and he wondered why. It never occurred to him that she could care, after all.

She came to him under softly shaded lights, looking not a year over twenty-four.

"Has time stood still?" he inquired and he felt the old thrill at touch of her hand.

She smiled and shook her head. "Does it ever? I am having another birthday, Gerald—must you always come on anniversaries?"

"They are anniversaries for me too," he retorted.

They talked about some amazing discoveries he had made in Tibet, and he had brought her a small ornament of milky-white jade. "For your birthday," he said.

"And my roses? You see I am spoiled."

"I believe Jenkins is bringing them now," said Lang.

Tabitha was counting roses again, and he saw her reach out with a handful for Jenkins, but Gerald's long arm interposed and he squeezed these flowers in with the others.

"Tabitha," said Gerald firmly, "come home to marry you if you would accept me—you know I love you—and we have wasted twenty years—if you are forty-eight years old, I want to marry you."

Tabitha grew very pink indeed, tears came into her lovely gray-blue eyes. "If you should hold my hands, Gerry," she whispered, "it would help a lot!"

His hands swiftly sought and found hers, so small and so warm. He held them tightly. "Does it matter—these years, love—if you feel young—and your heart is young enough to love me as of old?" he murmured.

She leaned toward him, fluttering, foolish Tabitha, who had been so tender of her years. "Ah, Gerry, darling, if I had known—if I had only known," she whispered contritely. "But I have suffered, dear, suffered in the waiting for you—take me quickly, Gerry, so that I can go away with you on your next voyage!"

"There will be no next voyage for me," declared Gerald happily—"only our wedding trip, if you wish to go a-sailing somewhere, my Tabitha!" Her face was very close to his, and her deep eyes were shining with love. "Ah, Gerry," she whispered, "anywhere—with you—will be heaven to me."

And then Gerald was quite sure.

IN MEMORIAM

Editor Union-Herald:— Ella Cleo Wiggins passed away to her eternal reward Tuesday morning, April 5, at St. Francis hospital, Columbus, where she had been for the last two weeks.

She had been operated on a week before and her death was due to peritonitis, following the operation.

She was married to Raymond Wiggins in April, 1920, and to this union were born two sons, Bernell Wiggins and Berl Wiggins. She is survived by her husband.

The funeral services were held at Mt. Carmel church and burial in Mt. Carmel cemetery. The service was largely attended by friends and relatives, who gathered to pay the last tribute to Mrs. Wiggins. Singers were from Haynes and Mrs. Helen George, of Circleville, was organist.

Mrs. Wiggins was a member of the Christian Union church in Circleville and lived on the George Stealy farm. She was a woman who will be greatly missed, but our loss is her gain and we hope to meet her again.

Oats Produced for Grain UnprofitableFarmers Can Well Substitute Other Grain.

Oats are one of the least profitable grain crops raised in New Jersey. This statement was made by Prof. G. W. Musgrave, agronomist at the College of Agriculture, New Brunswick.

Several years of observation and study have convinced Professor Musgrave that most farmers can well substitute soy beans, wheat, rye, or barley for the oats generally used in the common rotations. Particularly valuable are soy beans. At the present time it costs $34 to produce an acre of them whereas it costs $39 to produce an acre of oats. Even more striking is the difference in value between these two crops at the time of maturity; soy beans are worth $55 an acre, and oats are worth only $23.

Soy beans yield one to three or four tons per acre, and under favorable conditions should average two tons. In feeding value they compare favorably with alfalfa hay. Hence, on farms where considerable hay is fed, they may readily replace much other hay or release it for sale.

The soy bean is a legume and, consequently, a soil improver. By planting this crop the amount of nitrogen fertilizer required will be much less, for, like all legumes, it adds rather than removes nitrogen from the soil. If soy beans have never been grown on the field before, it is necessary to inoculate the seed. This is most easily done by the "soil and seed method" described in Extension Bulletin 32, issued free of charge by the College of Agriculture at New Brunswick.

When soy beans precede wheat in the rotation, prompt action at harvest time is necessary in order to prepare a seed bed properly for the wheat.

Water Warmed for Fall Pigs Helps Make Gains

Through the cold months pigs will pay big returns for the trouble and expense of warming their water. A feeding trial at the Ames experiment station showed that the pigs given warm water, through automatic troughs, not only matured earlier, but made gains on considerably less feed. Both lots were fed the same ration. The pigs that were fed in the old-fashioned troughs, where no attempt was made to warm the water, took 111 days to reach a weight of 225 pounds, and required 423 pounds of feed for each 100 pounds of gain. They showed a margin over feed cost of $5.98 each.

On the other hand, the pigs that were given the warmed water from the automatic troughs, reached an average weight of 225 pounds in 106 days, and required only 379 pounds of feed for each 100 pounds of gain. They showed a profit over feed cost of $7.13 each.

If one takes into consideration the saving in grain and the fact that these pigs reach maturity earlier than the others, the increased profit per pig was $1.70 in favor of warming the water.

Green Manure Crop Will Draw on Soil Moisture

Any green manure crop, whether rye, sweet clover or weeds, draws heavily on soil moisture. It is quite necessary, then, to watch the weather during the spring when such a crop is growing. If the season is below normal in rainfall, the rye may use up so much water that the corn crop will have a hard time getting enough and may die during a short period of drought. A ton of dry matter in the green manure crop may represent an amount of water equal to the entire rainfall of June.

Pasturing reduces the amount of water used by such a crop. Green manure may also be disced down or plowed under earlier than was originally planned. All green manure crops must be first thoroughly disced into the soil if danger of insufficient moisture is to be avoided. Discing also helps work the crop into the soil so that rapid decay will follow and the growing corn will receive the most benefit. Sweet clover decays more rapidly than rye and may cause somewhat less loss of moisture after it has been turned under.

Increase Cottonseed in the Ration for Steers

When the price of hominy is 10 per cent higher than the price of cottonseed meal, the amount of cottonseed meal should be increased so that it is 20 per cent instead of 10 per cent of the concentrated feeds in the ration for steers.

This is a statement of Prof. R. B. Hinman of the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y., who says that the general rule that cottonseed meal should not exceed 10 per cent of the grain ration should be shifted when hominy is high.

The increase in the cottonseed meal is economical and is safe if succulent feeds like corn silage or pea vine silage are fed.

Cottonseed meal fed to lambs may be increased to one-sixth of the grain ration if the lambs get silage and do not get legume roughage. These suggestions apply only to the present relative prices of cottonseed meal and hominy, and they cannot be used safely when the feeding period of steers exceeds 180 days or that of lambs exceeds 90 days.

Once Upon a Time

"AND then," the little girl sat with her knees under her chin and the light of romance and romancing was in her eyes, "and then there was a clatter as of horses' feet on the paving outside. It was—it was the prince in a golden chariot, come to take little Mary to the picnic at the castle."

So the story went on for Bonnie Lawr, plain of feature and modest in dress, had the trick of holding her audience. When she saw the fairies and the lands of splendor she was no longer the skinny Lawr girl. Her brown eyes become soft and she held her chin high. The circle tightened about her and Nathan Cromwell, of the freckled face, was closest. It was great fun, more fun than floating a raft in the creek, when Bonnie Lawr got "to seeing things."

After it was over and the girl had gone home, to the poorest home in Minden, she thanked her stars ruefully that she had an imagination. Always, in her play, she listened for the clatter of the horses and the coming of the prince.

Jasonville was planning its spring festival. The governor was going to deliver a speech, the silver cornet band was to play, and several hundred school children in marvels of homemade costumes were scheduled to execute maneuvers on the green. The little town fluttered in excitement a month ahead of the date but when the time narrowed to a week, and then a day, nothing else was worthy of conversation. Hadn't the merchants agreed to lock doors, and weren't the church ladies going to serve ice cream! On a little home in Elder avenue a sign proclaimed: "Miss Bonnie Lawr, dressmaking." There behind the window, waiting for her prince, was a brown-eyed woman of something over thirty. She was the Bonnie of old doing her best to pretend that Platt Peters, assistant at the garage, was a prince and that the automobile he would presently steer to the curb was a chariot. Platt, as a member of the "committee on conveyances" had agreed to see that Miss Lawr reached the picnic grounds. As he was married, very fat, and smoked a vile pipe it was so difficult to picture him as the prince, the Bonnie sighed.

Then it was the limousine came up the street. Bonnie's imagination made it hers but her mind told her it would go by without stopping. The limousine drew up to the curb and she rose frightened. It was a beautiful car with a uniformed chauffeur who had alighted and was opening the door.

The man who walked up to her door wore a high hat. It was the first Bonnie Lawr had ever seen. In the pictures such men were either landlords or United States senators. Thinking that he had made a mistake and that she must explain the dressmaker went to the door.

"Miss Lawr," the magnificent stranger was bowing, "I have come to take you to the picnic, if you will let me."

Bonnie could only nod. The committee on conveyances had found this surprising substitute for Platt Peters. As in a dream she walked to the car which was such a one as she had never seen. The stranger could see she was radiant.

"And then, and then," he was saying softly, "there came a clatter of hoofs in the court, and—"

"Nate Cromwell!" "Bonnie! Don't you know I have been looking for you? Do you think I didn't mean it when I said I would be successful some day and come back? Bonnie, I went back to Minden, and you were gone. No one could tell me where."

"But Nate, I didn't think you meant it. I thought you had forgotten. You were no more than a boy."

And so she rode to the picnic and when the crowd shouted a welcome and the silver band began to play she had her second surprise. This magnificent man, this Nate Cromwell of the high hat, this man who had just kissed her, was the governor. The little dressmaker's dream had come true.

"It seems a pity," Mark Twain once said, "that Noah and members of his family did not miss the boat."

"This statement was intended as a joke," adds Ed Howe, "but there is a good deal more than a joke in it. If Noah and members of his family had not found safety in the ark, the human race would have ended with the flood. Up to the time of Noah, the people had acted in such a foolish way that the Lord decided it was best to destroy them. The descendants of Noah are not doing any better. So it seems a pity Noah and members of his family did not miss the boat."—Capper's Weekly.

"INDIAN GIVER" LEGEND IS TOLD

Blackfeet See Moral and Trade Honestly

Glacier Park, Mont.—The odious expression "Indian giver" (meaning not for keeps), which is applied to people who give something and then want it back, never fitted the Blackfeet tribe after the Great Spirit brought disaster to Napee, an old man of their nation, according to the present-day oracles of the Glacier National Park reservation. Here is a legend that lives vividly among young and old:

Many moons ago an aged Indian traveling alone met a coyote and made a companion of him, just like he would a dog. The day was hot on the prairie and the Indian and coyote came upon a huge outstanding rock on the plains. The old Indian took off his buckskin coat and spread it over the rock, giving the garment, to the prairie landmark. After resuming his journey with the coyote it started to rain, and old Napee sent the wolf back for the coat.

But the rock wouldn't return the coat, and the coyote came scampering back to the Indian with its tail hanging between its legs. This made the aged brave mad, and he retraced his steps in haste, grabbed up the coat and started on his journey.

He and the coyote hadn't gone far when they heard a loud, rumbling noise. Looking back they saw the rock rolling after them. It bowled over a herd of buffalo, killing many, and came bumping over the prairie in pursuit of them. The coyote was flattened out dead. Napee saw a night-hawk soaring in the sky and called to it for help. The hawk flew down just as the overheated rock burst in two with a loud explosion.

Wiping the cold sweat from his brow, the Indian went on his way badly frightened by his experience. But he was a mean and selfish old man and hadn't learned the moral lesson of the incident. For when he came upon the nighthawk's nest he gave vent to his savage nature by forcing open the mouths of the young nighthawks until they bled.

The old nighthawk had followed and the Indian ran into the lake, thinking he'd escape the furious parent bird, but he found he couldn't keep his head above water lest the hawk pick his eyes out. So Napee drowned.

The Blackfeet Indians to this day relate the legend and point gravely to the moral of it, viz.: "When you give or trade with anyone, don't expect anything back, no difference what the loss or suffering may be." Thus it came to be the motto of the Blackfeet to do their trading "for keeps," and in trading with other tribes they always laid stress on the fact that they strongly discountenanced making a bargain and not standing by it.

AMUSEMENTS

The shifting sands of the Great American desert have doubtless covered some of the greatest dramatic stories ever enacted by man, and what more natural than that Francis McDonald, the star of "The Desert's Toll," should select the location he did, for the filming of this great out-of-doors epic?

The story of "The Desert Toll" which is the next attraction at the Met theater, starting today, has to do with the evil machinations of three outlaws in a mining country, and their complicated efforts to outwit Frank Darwin, a dashing young denizen of the ragged hills.

There's a girl from the east, effectively played by Kathleen Key, whose recent work in "Ben Hur" is still a topic of conversation. And Ton Santschi, the burly villain who has never been forgotten since his sensational debut in the first edition of "The Spoilers," is seen to tremendously good advantage.

The character of Frank Darwin, played by McDonald, is most interesting. He is a young, well educated white man, who lives with friendly Indians in a cave in the picturesque mountain rocks. He is that peculiar combination of the cultured white man and the primitive dweller in the untrammelled mountain fastnesses.

His love affair with the eastern girls runs the gamut of human emotions. Believing her, thruout most of the story, a false and treacherous tool of his enemies, he undergoes a gradual birth of love in spite of himself.

The mad dash over hillsides, pursued by the bloodthirsty desperadoes, which he carries the injured girl to medical assistance constitutes one of the most thrilling episodes of motion picture history.

Some people are like cider; they grow wickeder every day and nothing can be done about it.

Buck's Greenhouses will have an unusually beautiful display of

RECLAIMED CAR AND TRACTOR PARTS.

We have a limited supply of Ford car and Fordson tractor parts taken from cars and tractors that we have dismantled because some major part was worn out. These can well be used for repairs where the price of new parts will not justify their use. We offer at very low prices, front and rear axle assemblies, front and rear springs, motors, and in tractor parts there are gears, bearings, cylinder heads, axle housings, motor blocks, front and rear wheels, axles and other miscellaneous parts.

Malayan Snake-God

On Penang, an island off the east coast of the Malay peninsula, there is a temple in honor of the snake god worshipped under the name of Chur Su Kong. Inside the temple is crowded with snakes, ranging from 5 inches long to monsters as large as sea serpents. They are said never to harm the worshippers.

SEEK NEW METHODS TO CONSERVE COAL

Experts in all parts of the world are tackling the problem of how to use coal to the best advantage.

Professor Bergius of Heidelberg has reduced coal to a paste and combined it with hydrogen at a very high temperature and pressure. The resulting fluid has all the properties of crude petroleum and can be treated in the same way to produce petrol and other oils.

Another scientist reduces coal to a gaseous form and then liquifies the gases. He has produced methanol, which seems to have all the properties of wood alcohol; synthol, equivalent to a high-grade petrol; and a substitute for benzine.

General Patart, a Frenchman, has been experimenting with coal-produced synthetic alcohol, which shows a saving of 15 per cent in calories over petrol. The temperature of the radiator in which it is used was considerably lower than in cars using petrol.
